Special Report The Myth!

A surprising number of Americans are under the false belief that they are of partial American Indian ancestry. Usually they are told that grandma or great grandma was part Indian and in many cases was actually descended from an Indian princess.

By Rev. Thomas A. Robb

On October 12, 1492, Christopher Columbus touched the shore line of a small island in the Caribbeans. In his written testimony he said he was following a light. He named the island San Salvador.

John Watling, an Englishman, settled on the island in the 17th century, and Watling Island became the accepted name from the 1680s until 1926 when Columbus’s original name for the island was officially restored to San Salvador. San Salvador means Island of the Holy Savior.

Columbus thought that perhaps he had landed in the East Indies and thus the inhabitants were called Indians. Of course the name stuck and today all natives of both North and South America are called Indians though this name is now being rejected as being racist.

While there were exceptions, American Indians were considered a threat to European Christians. All but a hand-full of states enacted laws prohibiting marriages between whites and nonwhites - which usually included Indians. However, white Christians, on their own, generally rejected the abomination of interracial marriages between whites and non whites anyway. Never-the-less, with the advent of television, propaganda about Indians and the “noble savage” who loved the land, nature and would shed a gentle tear slowly down his cheek whenever litter was spotted left behind by some trashy white person, the experienced perception of Indians was altered until people wanted to actually be an Indian. Of course they knew they weren't, but there was always that mysterious unknown Indian that was able to creep into the family tree. No one could actually identify the mysterious Indian ancestor, but he or she was there anyway.

American Indians, like the one shown above, were a threat to European settlers throughout the United States and its western territories.

We are going to reprint three articles from earlier editions of The Torch about the common and unverifiable claims of American Indian ancestry.

Exposing the American Indian Ancestry Myth!

It seems like where ever I go I bump into someone who claims to be part Indian. It's like those people who boast that their German shepherd (or whatever) is part wolf suggesting that it is somehow superior because of its wolf blood. The Indian ancestry usually comes down from the grandma who was part Indian. It is amazing how it seems so many white people claim to be part Indian.

They have been convinced that because they are part Indian, they have some kind of noble ancestry, you know - The Noble Savage! and all that malarkey.

The fact is there really wasn't anything particularly noble about the American Indian. They were simply a migrating nomadic people who raped the land and destroyed everything in their pathway. There is no record of Indians in pre-United States ever building permanent settlements in any comparison to those in Europe. That is why they migrated! After robbing every egg from every bird nest possible, killing every bear, deer and rodent he could find and picking the last berry and digging up the last root - he was forced to move on to another happy hunting ground where he continued his destruction of nature.

On the buffalo hunts, buffalo would be run off a cliff and they would then take what they could and the rest would be left to rot into the ground.

The wives of the “braves” were worked to an early grave gathering broken twigs and branches from dead trees to place in their c r a m p e d Teepee, or wigwam trying to keep warm in the middle of winter.

In the spring the women ravaged the countryside looking for berries, roots, seeds and leaves until the region was totally “exhausted” as one Indian

Want to Be an Indian?

But you will have to get your own feathers!

I recall as a 6-year old watching the Howdy Doody Show on TV featuring 8-10 Sioux Indian children and thinking to myself, "Wow, I wish I was an Indian!"

Many people boast with pride that they are descended from an Indian princess, but when was the last time you saw a white person BOAST that grandma was an African princess?

Never?

A bi-racial person may say they have black blood but I don't think I have ever seen a white person brag that they are 1/16th Negro .

Why not? Certainly Negroes were just as much a part of the soil and nature and a noble savage as the American Indian. But being Indian was glamorized.

This Indian phenomenon has grown. Since the 1960s there has been an exponential explosion of white people claiming Indian ancestry.

Here are a couple of comments I got off the internet.

"I can tell you one big reason why many (whites) claim Native American Ancestry. (They) are "trained" since their first years in elementary school to believe their white heritage is essentially trash and racist. So they begin adopting other cultural ideas into their own lives."

Here is another.

"Positive stereotypes about Native-

Americans: Noble, spiritual, good warriors, in touch with the earth, etc. . . (most) white people in the U.S. really don't know about their heritage and what they do know isn't good."

"HOW!"

Welcome to the tribe!

Because many have bought into the white shame/white guilt complex and with glamorization of American Indians - becoming Indian has turned into a big business. Especially successful has been the Cherokee nation which has made membership so easy that being a Cherokee has mostly lost its meaning.

In fact, if you want to join the (UCN) United Cherokee Nation (Which is different than the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma), it takes no more of an effort than signing a notarized statement that you are a Cherokee and mailing in you appropriate membership fee. After 20 years, UCN says your notarized statement becomes a legal document making you and your descendants Indians forever.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau the Indian population slowly and steadily increased every year reaching a total population of 551 thousand by 1960. But then something happened in the 1960s. The desire to be Indian became compelling - fashionable. TV and movies made it exciting to be an Indian. The 1960s was throwing web-site described it - which is just another way of saying destroyed. Although some tribes may have had crude attempts at cultivation it was never enough to sustain a large population.

I am aware that at the time of European conquest there was a great variety of North American Indians with diverse customs, dwellings and levels of development. But for the most part Indian men hunted and not much more. All other responsibilities fell upon women who were old and worn out by the time they reached their mid 30s.

According to JSTOR (<https://daily.jstor.org>) which describes itself as a scholarly academic online journal providing access to more than 12 million academic journal articles, books and images.

“Nineteen century magazines gave descriptions of American Indian women in the following manner.

Native American women were depicted as attractive, desirable, and pious. Their moral natures were celebrated in stories of their self-sacrifice and submission, and their beauty was described at length. Interestingly, that beauty was one that matched nineteenth-century beauty ideals for white women: light skin, carefully groomed hair, a thin and shapely body dressed in popular colors.

...The Native American women that white women encountered in women's magazines were, in a sense, white women.”

In other words, Indian women did not look charming or appealing and so images and descriptions of white women was applied to Indians. All it took to make a white woman into an Indian was to stick a feather in her hair or have her put on an “Indian” headband.

See examples below

The white actress, Debra Paget (right) played the part of an Indian maiden Sonseeahray ("morningstar") in the 1950 movie Broken Arrow.

Of course, those who are good at creating and manipulating WHITE GUILT have made exaggerated claims of American Indian development and populations before Europeans invaded their paradise and slaughtered them.

By the end of the 20th century wild estimates were claiming an Indian population in excess of 100 million in what became the United States.

Of course, such claims are totally unreliable as there is absolutely no way those numbers can be substantiated as not a single Indian tribe created a census bureau. David Henige, historian, bibliographer, academic, librarian and Africanist scholar with the University of Wisconsin states that such population figures are from unreliable sources and insists there is not sufficient evidence to prove a large population of Indian tribes ever existed.

Historian Frances Jennings was an American historian, best known for his works on the colonial history of the United States wrote: “Scholarly wisdom long held that Indians were so inferior in mind and works that they could not possibly have created or sustained large populations.”

In 1992, studies released by William Denevan, professor emeritus of Geography at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and a member of Berkeley School of cultural-historical geography suggested the total population in the Americas was approximately 53.9 million. By region there were, approximately, 3.8 million for the United States and Canada, 17.2 million for Mexico, 5.6 million for Central America, 3 million for the Caribbean, 15.7 million for the Andes and 8.6 million for South America.

The fact is only God knows (if he even cares). But the reality is the Indian population in the Americas was small.

Hollywood has contributed a great measure in creating this White Guilt. Glorifying the attributes of the “Noble Savage” and at the same time demonizing whites for our destruction of “paradise” many whites feel shame and long for something in their heritage for which they can be proud. To them, being part Indian removes the guilt. Those few drops of Indian blood coursing through their veins cleanses them of the sin of their forefathers.

From movies, television and the Media of Mass Deception we have learned how brutal the white race has been. We have destroyed the peace and tranquility of native people around the world. We have polluted and destroyed the earth with our expansion, our industry and our disregard for Mother Nature which was cherished by native people. We are, as the Jewish political activist Susan Sontag said, “the cancer of the world.” This white guilt has caused many white people, though not openly admitting it, to loathe their ancestry and wish there was a “wolf” in their blood, even a distant “wolf” that can redeem them.

The lure of the Indian ancestry myth is usually attached to a beautiful lustful Indian maiden as depicted in these pictures which presents a softer and more acceptable entry of foreign blood. The Indian girls are given a sexual charm with an innocent connection to the unspoiled wilderness, or howling wolves, moonlit nights and the escape to a simpler past. Of course the “Indian” of movie myth is not really an Indian. Essayist Guy-Kirby Letts stated in his Indian Princesses and Cowgirls: Stereotypes from the Frontier explains how the film industry created the modern image of the Indian princess.

“As representations changed, the image of First Nations woman as Indian princess who embodied mystery and exoticism began to emerge during the post World War 1 era, the Indian princess is repeatedly portrayed alone in the pristine wilderness, scantily clad in a buckskin or tunic dress, sporting a jaunty feather over two long braids. Most striking, however is that all of the models are notably white-skinned women.”

Not only do Indian (especially females) images, which are often seen in movies, on TV and in souvenir shops look white, there is also the desire to ascribe them other attributes, most notably the mistaken image of the soft spoken, delicate, beautiful Indian princess with a flawless complexion unscathed by the “sins” and complexity of white man’s civilization.

British actress Audrey Hepburn starred in the 1960 movie Unforgiven as an Indian. But I don’t she was given a feather.

In The Real Story of Sacagawea, the staff from Straight Dope, writes.

“[T]he Shoshone (like other North American Indians) had no concept of royalty, as Lewis’s journals (of the Lewis and Clark expedition) make clear. The “Indian princess” stereotype turns up a lot in misleading history, and even more in third-rate television and movie westerns. The stock Indian princess, is often depicted as being tall, beautiful, and freakishly light-skinned. Think of Sacagawae as portrayed in the 1955 film, The Far Horizon.”

Vine Deloria is a professor of Political Science at the University of Arizona and is an American Indian. He helped explain the phenomenon of White people claiming to be Indian in Custer Died for Your Sins: An Indian Manifesto.

"During my three years as Executive Director of the National Congress of American Indians it was a rare day when some white didn't visit an office and proudly proclaim that he or she was of Indian descent.

"Cherokee was the most popular tribe of their choice and many people placed the Cherokees anywhere from Maine to Washington State. Mohawk, Sioux and Chippewa were next in popularity. Occasionally, I would be told about some mythical tribe from lower Pennsylvania, Virginia or Massachusetts which has spawned the white standing before me.

At times I became quite defensive about being a Sioux when these white people had a pedigree that was so much more respectable than mine. But eventually I came to understand their need to identify as partially Indian and did not resent them. I would confirm their wildest stories about their Indian ancestry and would add a few tales of my own hoping that they would be able to accept themselves someday and leave us alone.

"Whites claiming Indian blood generally tend to reinforce mythical beliefs about Indians. All but one person I met who claimed Indian blood claimed it on their grandmother's side. I once did a projection backward and discovered that evidently most tribes were entirely female for the first three hundred years of white occupation. No one, it seemed wanted to claim a male Indian as a forebearer.

"It doesn't take much insight into racial attitudes to understand the real meaning of the Indian grandmother complex that plagues certain whites. A male ancestor has too much of the aura of the savage warrior, the unknown primitive, the instinctive animal, to make him a respectable member of the family tree. But a young Indian princess? Ah, there was royalty for the taking. Somehow the white was linked with a noble hour of gentility and culture if his grandmother was an Indian princess who ran away with an intrepid pioneer. And royalty has always been an unconscious, but all-consuming goal of the European immigrant.

"The early colonists, accustomed to life under benevolent despots, projected their understanding of the European political structure on the Indian tribes in trying to explain its political and social structure. European royal houses were closed to ex-convicts and indentured servants, so the colonists made all Indian maidens princesses, then proceeded to climb a social ladder of their own creation. Within the next generation, if the trend continues, a large portion of the American population will eventually be related to Powhattan. While a real Indian grandmother is probably the nicest thing that could happen to a child, why is a remote Indian princess grandmother so necessary for many whites? Is it because they are afraid of being classed as foreigners? Do they need some blood tie with the frontier and its dangers in order to experience what it means to be an American? Or is it an attempt to avoid facing the guilt they bear for the treatment of the Indians?"

The Indian "princess" of fantasy.

The Indian "princess" of reality!

The website thoughtco.com has an interesting article titled The Cherokee Princess Myth written by Kimberly Powell a professional genealogist.

"My great-grandmother was a Cherokee Indian princess." How many of you have heard that statement? As soon as you hear that "princess" label, the red warning flags should be going up! While they are sometimes true, stories of Indigenous ancestry in the family tree are often more fiction than fact.

Family stories of Indigenous ancestry often seem to refer to a Cherokee princess. What's interesting about this particular legend is that it seems to gravitate toward the princess being Cherokee, rather than Apache, Seminole, Navajo, or Sioux. It's almost as if the phrase "Cherokee princess" has become a cliché. Keep in mind, however, that many stories of Indigenous ancestry could be a myth, whether it involves the Cherokee or some other tribe."

Is the person standing in front of me really part Indian. I suppose it's possible, but likely they are no more Indian than they would be a Martian.

In Arkansas there are many people who claim to be part Indian and like Vine DeLoria, the American Indian professor I mentioned earlier, I have never had anyone claim the Indian connection was to a male ancestor. There was a good friend of this ministry who said that he was concerned about the claim by his mother that they were part Indian. There was no proof and no records available. It was just a fact! His great great grandma or some grandma (you guessed it) was an Indian princess. So he was able to narrow down his research to this one branch of the family tree. He discovered that this Indian ancestor was born in Scotland.

This would be the same story for most people who are under the myth that they have an Indian ancestor..

Did intermarriage with Indians happen? Sure it did, but for the most part it was unacceptable as much so as intermarriage with Negroes. Therefore it rarely happened. END

Has God Removed His blessings from America

It certainly seems so. We hear of inflation, illegal aliens, anti-white Critical Race Theory (CRT), weakened economy and the confusion some have in determining how to tell the difference between a boy and a girl.

We are told that these are the problems Americans face. But these are not the problems!

They are the curses we face for turning against God.

But HOW have we Turned Against God?

We stopped loving our God and stopped loving our people!

We have allowed millions of aliens into our country with their strange gods and they approached the Christian values which built America!

We are being replaced. Our once beautiful cities have become cities of the 3rd world. Our Christian culture has been debased. Deuteronomy 28:43 told our ancient Israel ancestors that the aliens we let into our country will become the "head" and we will become the "tail."

We see this where ever we look. White people are being replaced. A person of color can boast of their racial pride, but if a white person does it they are called racist!

Easy Math

Some say there are only 15 million (only!) illegal migrants in America. But others say there are as many as 30 million illegal migrants.

The US has a population of 332 million.

If there are 15 million migrants that would mean one out of every 22 people you see on the streets are here illegally.

If the newer figures are accurate that would mean one out of every 11 people you see on the streets are here illegally.

white people around like a rag doll. By 1980, a short 20 years, those claiming to be Indian nearly tripled from 551 thousand to 1.4 million and by 1990 it had almost quadrupled to 1.959 million.

Unfortunately, there are those who consider even a mythical drop of Indian blood, as a status symbol, something to be proud of - to boast about. White self hate has convinced some white people that they no longer have to be ashamed of being white because they are really Indian - the people of nature - the land - flowing rivers - the eagle and the wolf.

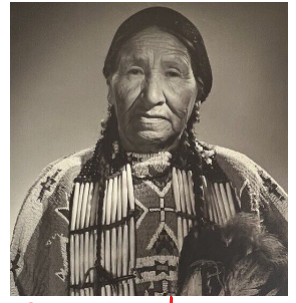

I pointed some of this out to an individual a while back and he became quite agitated that I would try to take the source of his pride. There was no evidence of his "Indian" heritage, but as so often is the case, he felt comfort identifying with the "underdog" the hapless Cherokee, the trail of tears etc. It was evident that he was consumed by white guilt and he was trying to admonish the "sins" of his forefathers.

I find it absolutely amazing that this man, the descendant of those who built the cathedrals of Europe, who mapped the stars, chartered the oceans, who gave us self-government, who carries the blood of William Shakespeare, Leonard da Vinci, Thomas Jefferson, Stonewall Jackson, Thomas Edison, Galileo - the descendant of the Celts, the Vikings and the Scottish Highlanders would dip to find "pride" in a nomadic people whose only achievement was the bow and arrow, who worked his wife like chattel and destroyed the land as he moved about, never creating anything of lasting value except a bit of pottery,

How can a person find pride in so little and shame in so much! END

The Family's FAKE Indian history

Grandma?

When in 1971 we moved to the Arkansas Ozarks I was amazed by the number of native Arkansans claiming their grandmother or great grandmother had Indian ancestry. It seems like everyone was making this claim. It was part of their family history, "Look at those old black and white pictures and you can see grandma's dark hair and high cheekbones!" Ya de ya de ya.

About 1995 a neighbor of ours spoke about the "beautiful love story" of how her great great-grandfather fell in love with an Indian princess from which her family descended. At least she thought it was her great great grandfather - she wasn't sure. She just knew it was a "beautiful love story."

I never gave much credence to these stories because of the sheer fanciful logistics of its possibility. Interracial marriage to Indians was not accepted or common and doing so was about on the same level as marriage to a Negro.

If the stories I heard was true, it would have meant that there would have been massive intermarriages - but there wasn't. In fact most of the Arkansas Indians were removed out of the state to insure the safety of white settlers. So by the time Arkansas reached statehood in 1836 the Indian population in Arkansas was virtually nonexistent. Yet many would claim, "My grandmother was an Indian - so I was told." My wife and along with our kids would joke - "That grandma must have really gotten around!"

I have known many people over the years that would make the "I am part Indian!" claim and I would often ask, "How do you know you are part Indian?" and the reply would all be identical. "Well, it is what I was told."

In January of 2015 a report was released in The American Journal of Human Genetics titled, "The Genetic Ancestry of African Americans, Latinos and European Americans across the United States." The report clearly shows that White Americans were still white or as one genetic student claimed was "shockingly white," in spite of decades of race-mixing propaganda.

Data for the study was supplied by the DNA research company 23 and Me from 148,789 people who identified themselves as being white. Permission was granted for their DNA results to be included in the research.

The number of individuals in this study was huge considering most demographic research is done with only a few hundred.

White Americans are those of European descent and it was discovered that only about 1 to 3.5 percent of White Americans have a trace of non-European ancestry. Again, this is from among the average man or woman who would list themselves as white. It would not include those who are admittedly bi-racial. Of those self identified white folks the foreign (non-White) blood in the 1- 3.5 percent was 5 to 10 generations in the past (150-300 years).

Well-known geneticist Razib Khan pointed out in an article on The Unz Review, "What genetics is showing is that in fact white Americans are shockingly European to an incredibly high degree for a population with roots on this continent for 400 years."

Furthermore, Khan continued, "We'd be amazed that the indigenous peoples (Indians) had so little demographic impact."

The conclusion is simple, for those people who proudly report to you (or maybe shamefully report to you) that they are part Indian are more than likely not Indian at all - not even a little bit!

Not a drop!

It doesn't make any difference what the family fake story says.

Caution! I did explain this to one person and he got a little testy because he wanted to be an Indian. The fact is, he looked as much an Indian as Lief Erikson looked like the child of an African princess. But being Indian was important to him because it proved he had a wolf in his ancestry. Being part wolf was more important than being the descendant of Vikings. END

Don't let the Government get it's hands on your money!

If you do not have a properly prepared will - upon your death the government may seize all of your bank accounts and property.

Many people instruct their attorney to prepare a will that leave a portion to 1) children, 2) nieces and nephews, 3) a charity, or 4) a university.

1) While leaving your estate to children is noble and perhaps with a feeling of obligation: consider do they embrace White Christian Revival. Sometimes children are even anti-racist and WOKE. You need to reconsider.

2) The same can be said for nieces and nephews,

4) Leave a portion of your estate to a charity is always a good idea. These are groups that care about the issues you care about. However, you still need to consider what the aims of the charity is beyond the advertisements. For example Mercy Hospital sounds wonderful but it primarily focuses on 3rd world countries and offer little (if any) benefit to the mission of White Christian Revival.

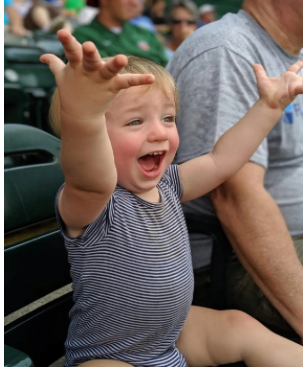

5) Leaving money to your Alma Mater (I don't care how good their football team is) is really a foolish gesture. These universities are the breeding ground for all the WOKE agenda plaguing us today.

If you would like to leave a portion of your estate to the Christian Revival Center, contact Pastor Robb at 870-427-3414 or you can call the law firm of Jason M. Robb at 870-743-2215 and he will prepare your Last Will and Testament at no charge to you or to the church. He will be able to handle this for you regardless of where you live. In other words, you do not have to be a resident of Arkansas.

If you already have your Will prepared by your own attorney, you can simply ask your attorney to add to it the Christian Revival Center. Jason Robb will be happy to provide proper information to your attorney.

Go Team!

I have seen too many people over the years who expressed real concern about what is happening in America but their children have totally no interest.

Why do you think that is? I have seen parents who have a favorite football team. Here is a little guy cheering that his favorite football team just got a touch down. The amazing thing is that it was his father's favorite football team also. And what is more amazing it was also his grandfather's favorite football team.

How did that happen? They go to every game they can. They often have ball caps or shirts with the name of their team or the name of their favorite player. and you know what their children usually love the same

football team.

Yet, I have seen time and time again where parents fail to excite their children about the love for America.

Going to church or conferences are not given any excitement. Create fun for your children, have pictures taken of them with some of the speakers or some outstanding individual that you can respect. Help them to cheer our team!

If you re-post stories on the internet, have your children be engaged with you to help decide what stories you want to re-post. We have lost too many kids because their parents just didn't take time to involve their children. Your kids need to have the excitement that this guy here has. And it's your job to build that excitement every day. Other wise you will wonder why your kids don't love America as much as you do. Many parents wouldn't even think about missing the game, but they miss church without even a blink END
